just, Tho' evils press, and tho' we sink to dust; Tho' darkness shrouds thy throne and clouds thy face, I cleave to thee, and hope thy pard'ning grace Firm as thy truth, thy promise ever sure, And Jesus' blood my safety will procure; Thy mercy beams with full replendent ray, And opes the portals of eternal day.

Before thy thrown I bow beneath thy rod, And own the arm and angry frown of God Thy head I feel, nor dare thy dreadful power, Support me, God, in this tremendous hour. Whate'er my doom whate'er my state shall be, O! grant me still to put my trust in thee.

FROM THE EMERALD.

(We insert with pleasure the follownever be any less true, than that which is directed against one half of creation)

ON THE FREQUENT SATIRE UPON WOMEN.

FROM the libertine and the rake proceeds that infolent contempt with which in public affemblies and public prints the females of the prefent day are infulted. From the errors of perverted minds these incorrigible profligates give licence to their tongues, and presume to write in most diffespectful terms of a fex for whose protection and support the God of nature intended Man. From them proceeds that stile of remark which so often wounds the ear of feeling innocence, or raifes the well deferved finile of contemptuous diffegard.

Woman is the tender flower of fociety, whose very weakness is the best claim to protection. Prevented, howe ver, from a detence of her fex by an inestimable and indispensible delicacy, by a restraint which custom and general opinion impofes, and which propriety would lead her to observe in its fullest extent. The is subjected to the detraction of confident calumniators rioting in the unrestrained licentionsness of their thoughts, and turning into ridicule and forn the weakness which cannot refist comprehends the extent of that tenderness which is due to the fex; it is not the Don Quixotte fally of heated imagination, which proves the regard they are so often acknowledged to deferve, or pays the debt which nature has imposed on man. We well know that the breath have constantly on hand, a large and handsome of flander shakes a woman's reputation, assortment of on which is her whole dependance for esteem and her sole claim for respect; Glass, China, and Queens' Ware, yet with unequalled illiberality the Japanned Tea-trays, Waiters &c. &c. whole lex is publicly and undefervedly cenfured, by those, who, to say the best well worth the attention of all country store them, are mere votaries of vice. - keepers connected with Philadelphia. cular invitation, to grace an affembly terms for cash, or for approved drafts at a shor with their presence, the literay exercises date. of the day are fraught with double-entendres and ill contrived attempts at wit; the fubject of which is the female part on TAKEN UP by Jeffe K.
